Born in Paris, Mary was raised in New England and has made Alaska her home since 1990. The daughter of renown sculptor David Hayes, critics note that she has inherited his eye for selecting fresh, evocative images from nature. As an avid hiker, she goes out to meet Alaska's beauty head-on, sometimes spending weeks in the wilderness for the best available shots. She has exhibited widely, and her work has appeared in numerous publications, including the New York Times.

"Few things are more inspiring than to watch a salmon jumping the falls, determined to make it home to spawn... or a bear watching the same salmon, determined to make it lunch."
